How quality saves you money...

With cancer, heart disease, diabetes, and other health problems on the rise, people are looking for information and products they can depend on.

At larger companies, discount stores and internet sites you can usually get cheaper prices, but...

...will you get results?
...will you get quality?
...will you get caring assistance?
...will you get truthful information?

Can you expect results?

Besides the need for consumers to use products appropriately (as directed), desirable results typically come when several other important factors are in place.

- 1) Quality products.
- 2) Professional assistance.
- 3) Accurate information.

Can you trust the product quality?

Not all supplements are created the same.

Cheaper products may actually cost more in the long run by adding to the toxic load of chemicals in your body and ultimately contributing to disease conditions. These cut-rate products often contain additives, food allergens, sugar, artificial food coloring and flavoring. Some even contain shellac, chlorine and other potentially hazardous chemicals. Each of these substances may cause or contribute to ADD, migraine headaches, cancer, and other health problems.

Furthermore, the hard coating used on inexpensive vitamins often keeps the product from being properly dissolved. Consequently, the consumer absorbs little if any of the product's contents.

In addition, it may actually be necessary to take up to 10 times the amount of a cheaper product to get the same results as a high quality product. It has been reported that Doctors at Duke University examined 12 different bottles of a popular supplement and found most samples contained 60% or less of the amount claimed on the label! A number of other tests have turned up the same problem.

Quality conscious companies spend more time, money, and effort to make sure consumers are getting what they expect with the products they purchase. We believe products from these quality oriented companies provide a much better value for the consumer.

Can you really get trusted guidance in finding the best products for your needs?

Your health needs are as unique as your fingerprint.

Is there someone you can trust to provide support and guidance in finding the right products and a workable health plan for you? Are there experienced natural health care professionals, such as Naturopaths, Herbalists, etc., available who are ready to assist you in developing a plan to fit your personal needs? Are they able to offer scientific evaluations to locate problem areas and establish priorities in addressing the body systems that require support? These specialized services can actually save consumers many dollars by zeroing in on specific needs and products. Time and money are not wasted on simply guessing at what might be required.

It is our core belief to treat every customer and client like family or friend. Each relationship presents us with a unique God-given opportunity to make a lasting improvement in a life.

Can you trust the information about product and health issues to be accurate and helpful?

There is no such thing as a "cure-all" nutritional system or product. Beware of companies who tout their products as "all you need!" or imply that "if we don't have it, you don't need it!" While there are a number of excellent companies providing high quality nutritional products and services, there are few that provide a balanced accurate approach to health and wellness. We believe you need truthful and authoritative health information upon which to base your decisions. Dedicating time to research enables us to more consistently provide accurate wellness information. Our commitment means financial and time savings by cutting through the hype, fads and false information that could lead to poor product purchasing decisions.
